CAST

GEORGE: About 75 years old, looks despondent. Nicely dressed.

GRACIE: About 75, tearful and depressed. Very well dressed, rather prim.

Place

A bench on the street of a small town.

Time

A pleasant morning, about ten o'clock.

ACT ONE

GEORGE: Where's the dog?

GRACIE: I beg your pardon?

GEORGE: You usually have the dog with you. The big golden one.

(GRACIE says nothing for a moment, wiping her eyes, looking sad)

GEORGE: Did he die?

GRACIE: Oh, goodness, no! He's still being boarded.

GEORGE: Oh.

GRACIE: I was in the hospital for a while. Then I had to stay with my son.

(GEORGE nods, says nothing. After a brief silence, GRACIE glances at him.)

GRACIE: Nobody could keep him. But I'm better now.

GEORGE: That's good. Haven't seen you in church lately.

GRACIE: Tripped on the ice and broke my wrist. (she holds up her arm) It is healed.

GEORGE: So when do you get the dog back?

GRACIE: I don't know. I have to move from my condo...and it seems that I can't take him to the Silver Top Retirement Home. I'm supposed to go there next month. (she pauses, wipes a tear away)

GEORGE: Tough to give up such a nice dog. I felt that way when I gave up my car.

GRACIE: You don't drive?

GEORGE: (shrugs) I could, but the insurance was too expensive. I could heat the house or have a car.

GRACIE: That's too bad. Your house is big---I remember it from when I visited Dora Turner who lived next door to you. Nice yard.

GEORGE: Yeah. Too big for me, or so the kids say. They want to sell it.

GRACIE: Where would you go?

GEORGE: I dunno. They want me to move into their house, well, not the house but a little studio in back. Up in Yreka.

GRACIE: I tried staying with my son and his family for a while. Everything I did there seemed wrong...couldn't even watch my stories without somebody complaining. I used to go sit in my car with the dog.

GEORGE: I'd like to have a dog again. Would be company in that big old house. Guess I'm just too old to think about it.

GRACIE: Maybe you'd like my dog? It would be better than sending him—uh, I don't know where he'd go! (she looks distraught, wipes her eyes)

GEORGE: Oh no...I couldn't take your dog. Probably couldn't afford to feed him.
